ABOUT THE AUTHOR

DAVID FREMONT grew up in Fremont, California—yep, a Fremont from Fremont! He loved watching Underdog cartoons, reading comics, and drawing with his brother. When David was eleven, his cousin Steve showed him a super-cool shark comic that he had drawn, inspiring David to start drawing his own comics. When David grew up, he moved across the bay to San Francisco, where he got a job painting cartoons at an animation studio. While at Colossal Pictures, he created projects for Cartoon Network and Disney. More recently, after moving to Los Angeles, he created a pilot for Nickelodeon and an online kids series for DreamWorksTV, called Public Pool. He currently lives in Woodland Hills with his family (and many furry pet creatures!), where he teaches cartooning classes to kids. Tater Invaders! is his second book for children.

Make your own Blaster!

In Reptoids from Space, Carlton uses a blaster filled with Shrink Orbs to capture the Reptodackyl. You can make your own blaster with household items!

Make sure to have an adult help you.

Taken from Frugal Fun for Boys and Girls (<https://frugalfun4boys.com/>)

To make one you'll need:

- An empty plastic bottle (we used a 12-oz. bottle)
- Scissors
- String
- Rubber bands – two per toy
- A large bead
- A nail – for punching a hole in the lid of the bottle.

Instructions:

1. Cut off the bottom of the bottle. Then cut four notches around the edge. Slide the rubber bands through the notches so that they make an X as shown below:

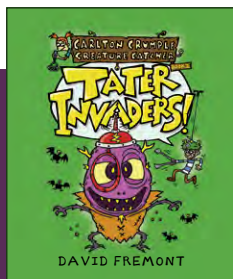

2. Use a hammer and nail to poke a hole in the bottle lid (adult job). Tie a string to the connection of the two rubber bands. Run the string down through the hole in the lid, and then tie a bead to the bottom of the string.

3. When you pull back on the bead, the rubber bands gain potential energy. Release the bead, and the energy is transferred to the ball!
